IDIAL ... Some years ago, when I was young, And Mrs. Jones was Miss Definer; When wedlock's compy was hung With curtains from the loom of fours,

I used to paint my future life
With most postical precision,
My special wonder of a wife—
My happy days—my nights Elysian

I saw a lady rather read

(A Jero was my state althorrence)
With flaxen hair, contrived to fall
In careless ringlets in to Linrence;
A bloade compleximit eyes that draw
Prom Astrono eleuds their acure brightness

From Authors who do their across to The foot of Venue, arms whose hus Was portest in its miley whiteness. I asw a party, quite se'ect-There might have been a baker's depen,

A parson of the ruling sect.
A bridesomid, and a city comsin;
A formal speech to me and on as

(Its meaning I could scarpe discover) A taste of cake, a sig of wine; Zome kinning—and the seems was ever!

I saw a baby—one—no more;
A cherab picture, rather faintly
Beride a pollist dame who were
A countenance extremely saintly
I saw—but both ng could i hear,
Except the action practic, may be-

The myrest breath upon the our-REAL. Teec a woman; rather tall,
And yet, I own, a comely lary;
Complexion, and as I must call
(To be exact) a little shedy.

A hand not handsome, yet concert A generous one for love or pity; A nimble foot, and—neatly dressed In No. 5—extremely prosty; I see a group of girls and boys
Assembled round the knee paternal,
With raidy checks and tangled ouris,
And namesis may be supernal;
And one has reached a manty size,

And one appires to woman's stature, And one is quite a recent prize, And all abound in human nature?

The boys are hard to keep in trim, The girls are often very trying, And baoy-like the cherulium-Seems very foul of steady crying And yet the precious little one, His mother's dear despote master, Is worth a thousand behief done In Parish or alabaster!

And oft that stately dame and I, When taughing o'er our early dreaming.

And macking, as the years go by,
thou talle was our years for by.
Confess the wiser power knew
If we care each earthly joy enhances.

And gave us blessings rich and true,
And better for than all our fanctes.

A Beminiscence, and a Promise From the Northern Hilpoisan (B. F. Taylor.)

Twenty-two years ago, in the very height and heat of a Presidential campaign, we attended a mass meeting in one of the groves of Michigan. June had filled it with leaves, and politics had filled it with people; men, women, children-thousands of them; - we never knew whence they came, and although we saw them pass away, till the squirrels DRUGGISTS came out of their hiding places and looked after the retreat, and the birds set up a song over it, we never had a clear idea what became of them all.

Well, among the speakers on that day, was a young lawyer from Detroit. Not in the 'Punch' acceptation of the term, was he a 'prominent' citizen, for slender, fair-faced and gay-hearted, he did not seem, just yet, the man to lay the masonwork of solid argument, or sway the wultitude. But when he began to speak, the rustle of the crowd subsided, and from centre to circumference, it was a mosaic of up-turned faces, warming with his thought and kindling with enthu-

And there he held them by the charm of his address; one moment keen, logical direct, convincing, and his persuasive voice rang through the silent woods .-Again, some flash of wit would brighten those close set faces into one broad smile; or some thrust of satire or burst of cloquence would stir them till they woke the echoes. All the way through it was a masterly piece of work, and when it was ended, the multitude, had they been a jury, would have given him a verdict without leaving their seats; had they been all the people, would have made him President by acclamation. Years have come and gone in quick succession, but they have not trampled out the deep impressions of that disive. That man was George C. Bates, E.q., now of Chicago, of the firm of Measure, Mather, Bates & Tait, and the fires then newly kindled, have glowed brighter and broader since that June in Michigan woods, the sterling talent has ipened, and experience has made rich. A thorough lawyer, able, vigilant, faithil, fear ess; a most persuasive speakeralways eloquent because always outspoken-large-hearted and open-hande L ic wins at once friends and cases. He is now in the right place, and fairly established in our Metropolis, he will assert and maintain his place in the foremost rank, among the most gifted and eloquent of the lawyers of the Northwest.

Poverty runs strongly to fun. A man is never so full of jokes as when he is reduced to one shirt and two potatoes .--Wealth is tacitorn and fretfol. Stock brokers would no sconer indulge in a hearty laugh than they would lend money on a second mortgage. Nature is a great believer in compensations. Those to whom she sends wealth, she saddles with lawsnits and dyspepsia. The poor never indulge in woodcock, but they have a style of appetite that converts a number three mackerel into a suffmon, and that is quite as well.

A young lady from a boarding school being asked at the table if she would "take more," replied; "By no means, madam; gastronomic satiety admonishes me that I have arrived at the ultimate of deglutition consistent with the code of Æsculapiua!

Dr. Johnson says that "among the enemies of friendship are suspicion and disguet. The farmer is always hardening the cautions, the latter always repelling

A good man who has seen much of this world and is now tired of it, says: "The grand essentials to happiness in this world are, something to do, something to love, and something to hope for."
